Case study

Civil Construction Company:

As a civil construction company, we often struggle with finding reliable staff who are willing to upskill and train. We decided to give the Department of Corrections Employment Services a try and could not be happier with our result.

We were introduced to a jobseeker called Tom. Tom had served a prison sentence and was a young man who was motivated and eager to give civil a go.

After meeting with him we thought we would try him out and gave him the tough jobs around the yard. Most of the others walk off after a few hours, but not Tom. Tom proved us wrong and worked harder than anyone we have had before.

Four years later Tom is still with us. Tom has upskilled from a labourer to an operator, with his goal to become a foreman by the end of the year. Not only has Tom thrived at work, he is now the proud Dad of a little boy.

The support and encouragement he received from the Employment Services team was amazing. Watching Tom thrive has been the greatest achievement in my company to date.
